

Caleb Lyons' Portfolio

Portfolio Website: Caleb-Lyons.com

Email: Caleb@Caleb-Lyons.com

Message: 913-302-0440

All designs original

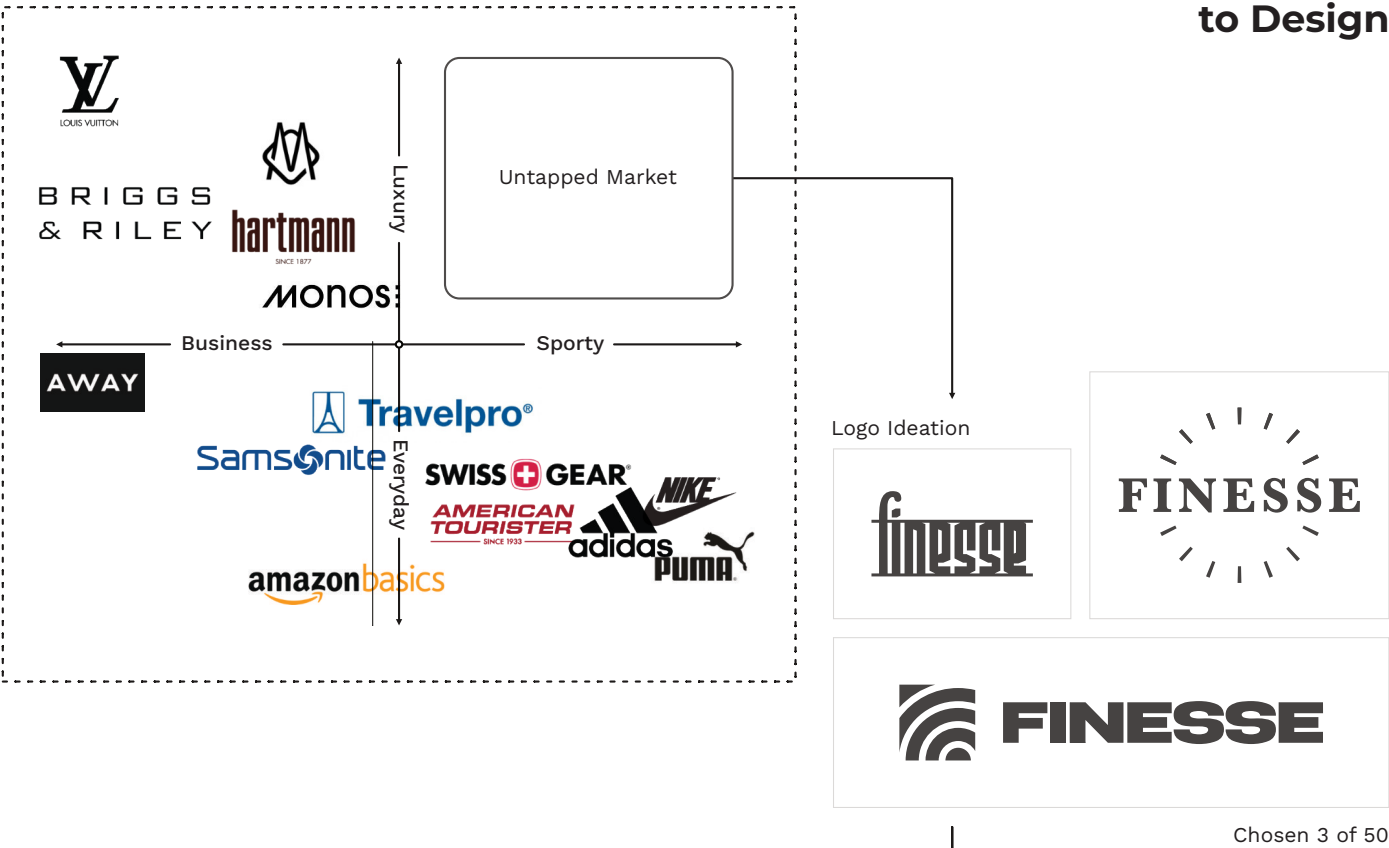

All Uncredited photography and mockups are original or sourced from Unsplash with significant edits

Caleb-Lyons.com

Brand Development:
Market Research
to Design

The Crowded Baggage & Travel Gear Market

Logomark Meaning

An abstraction of the individually-unique human fingerprint and a representation of movement, freedom, and individuality.

Typography Anatomy

Built from Helvetica and adjusted to Finesse's unique touch, these heavy slanted letters convey high-grade durability with confidence.

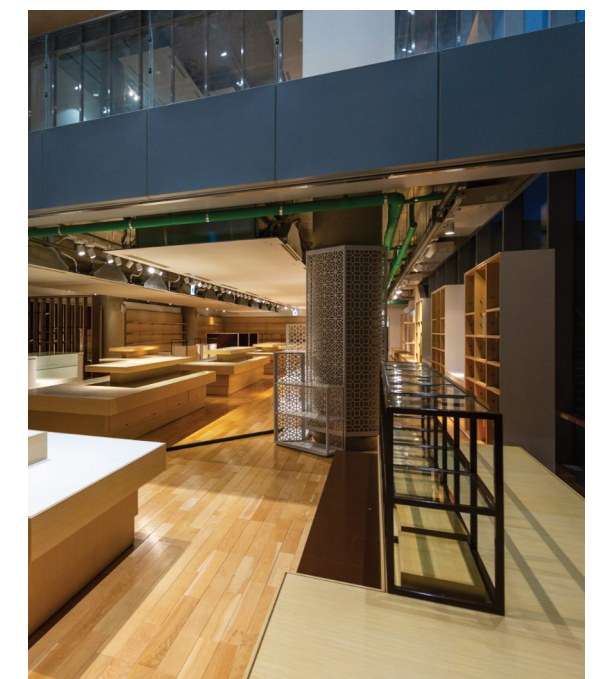

Name Choice

Chosen for its coin-flipping, board-room-maneuvering connotation, "finesse" also sounds and reads very similar to "fitness".

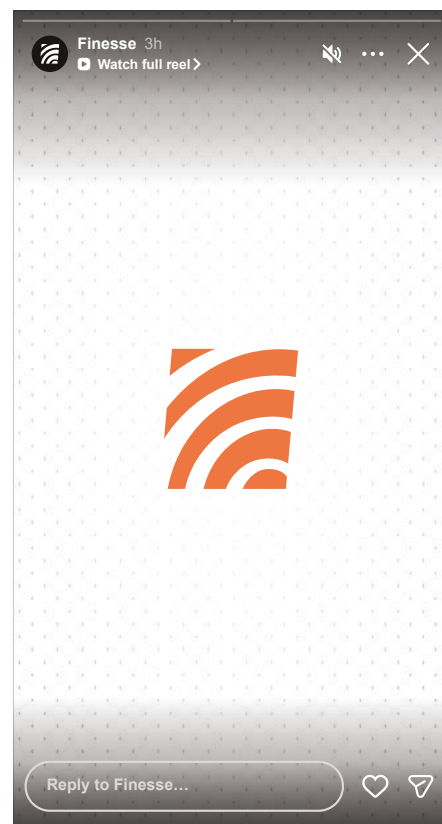

Brand Application: Ultrawide Logo to Mobile Sizes

Maximize

One way of using the wordmark in vertical formats is by leaning into the wordmark's extreme width.

However, this should be reserved for big announcements like product launches due to it's high-energy.

Minimize

Another, more relaxed way to use the wordmark is by simplifying it down to it's logo.

Perfect for signing off content that's not explicitly "from Finesse" because of it's non-intrusiveness.

Not at all

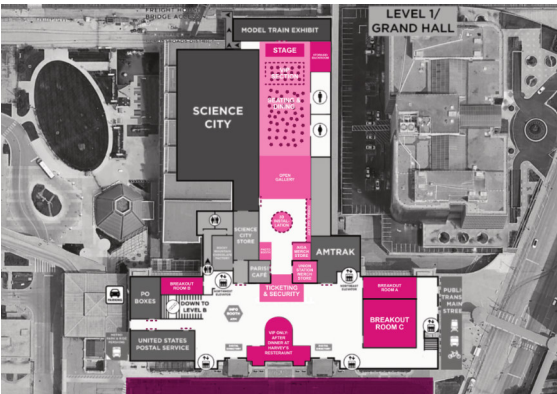

In some cases, a wordmark or logo isn't necessary—the content speaks for itself.

This is especially true when the content is focused on an already branded product or the customer already knows they're looking at a post by Finesse.

Signage & 3D Application

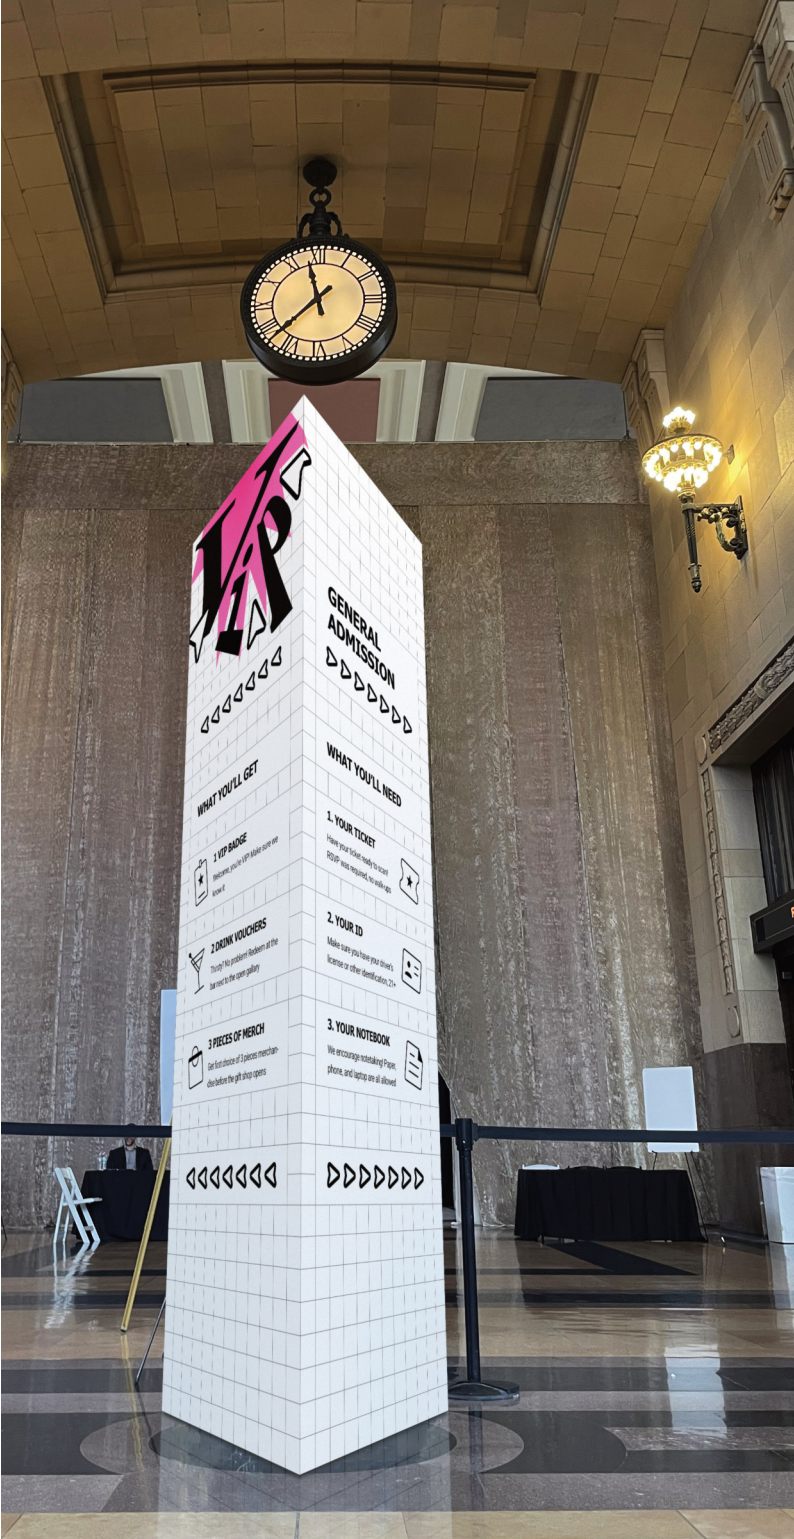

Initial Concept

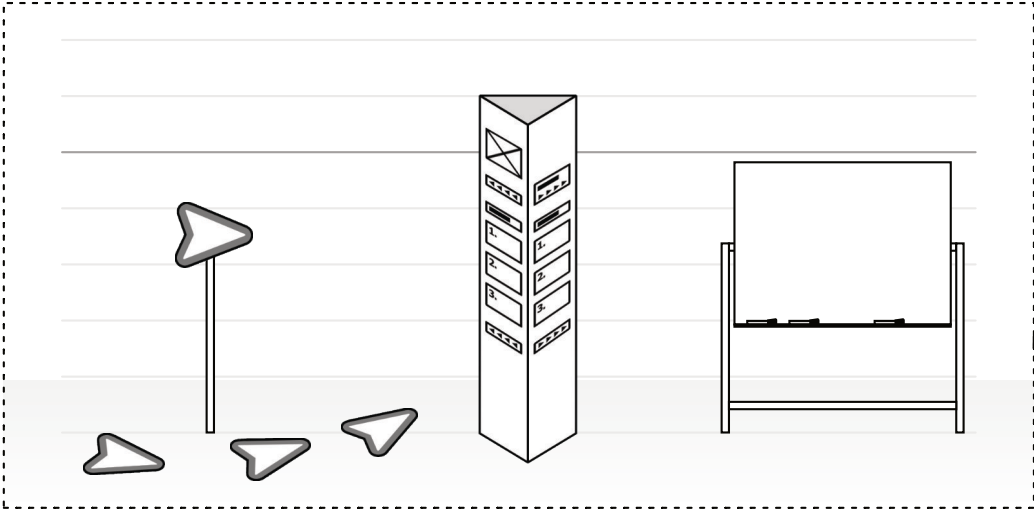

Event Logistics

This is an event for designers and artists to gather at Union Station for talks, design workshops, and a typographic art gala. Guests need to be able to navigate to the main event in the grand hall and be reassured that they are in the right place.

Projected Welcoming

Projected onto the entrance walls of Grand Hall. Grabs the attention of attendees to reassure them that they are in the right place.

Course Cursor

Attached onto existing sign poles and stuck onto the flooring of hallways. Directs attendees from entrance to ticketing.

Ticketing Totem

Built from sturdy board and folded into a triangular tower. Divides ticketing into two lines: VIP pass and General Admission.

Breakout Room Board

A printed graphic letter mounted magnetically on a white board. Labels which breakout room is which with white space for attendees and speakers to sign and draw.

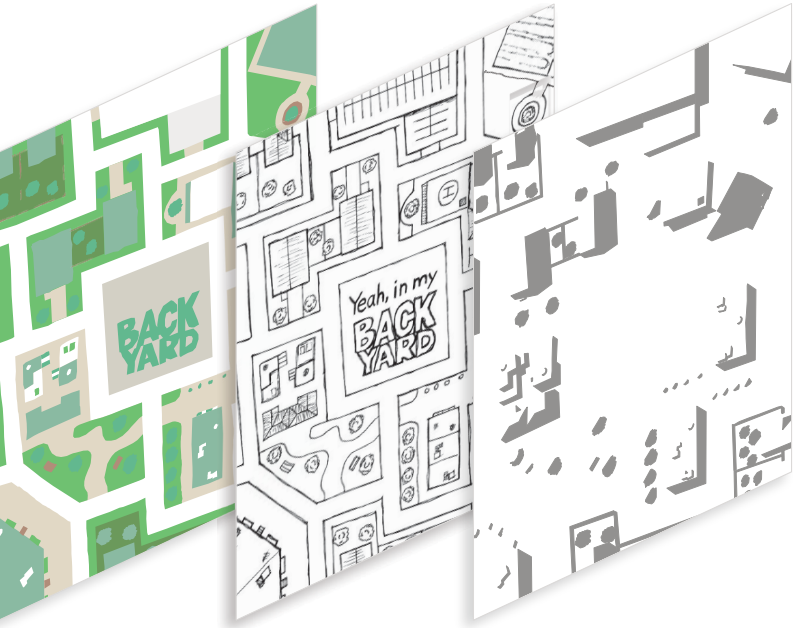

Anti-home-development riot in Bristol
photo taken by Paul Gillis

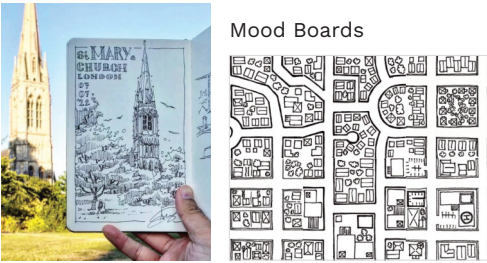

NIMBY: Fear of Change

“Not in my backyard!” A phrase every city across the globe has had to contend with every time they want to build something.

The reason why such a common problem keeps resurfacing stems from a lack of communication with neighbors before the construction begins.

Addressing Every Developing City’s Biggest Problem

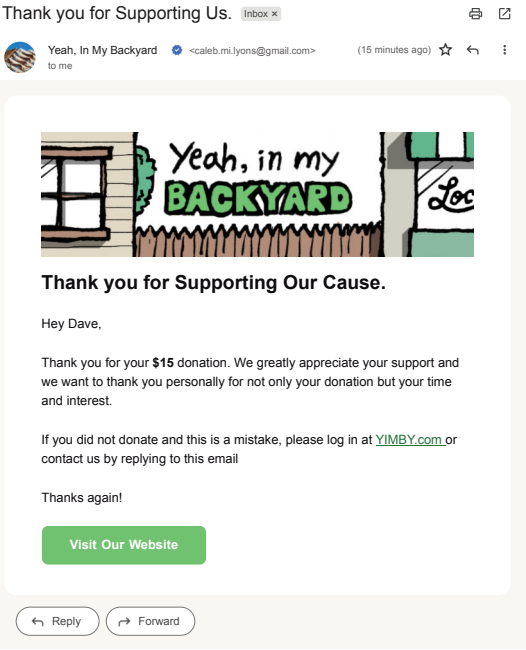

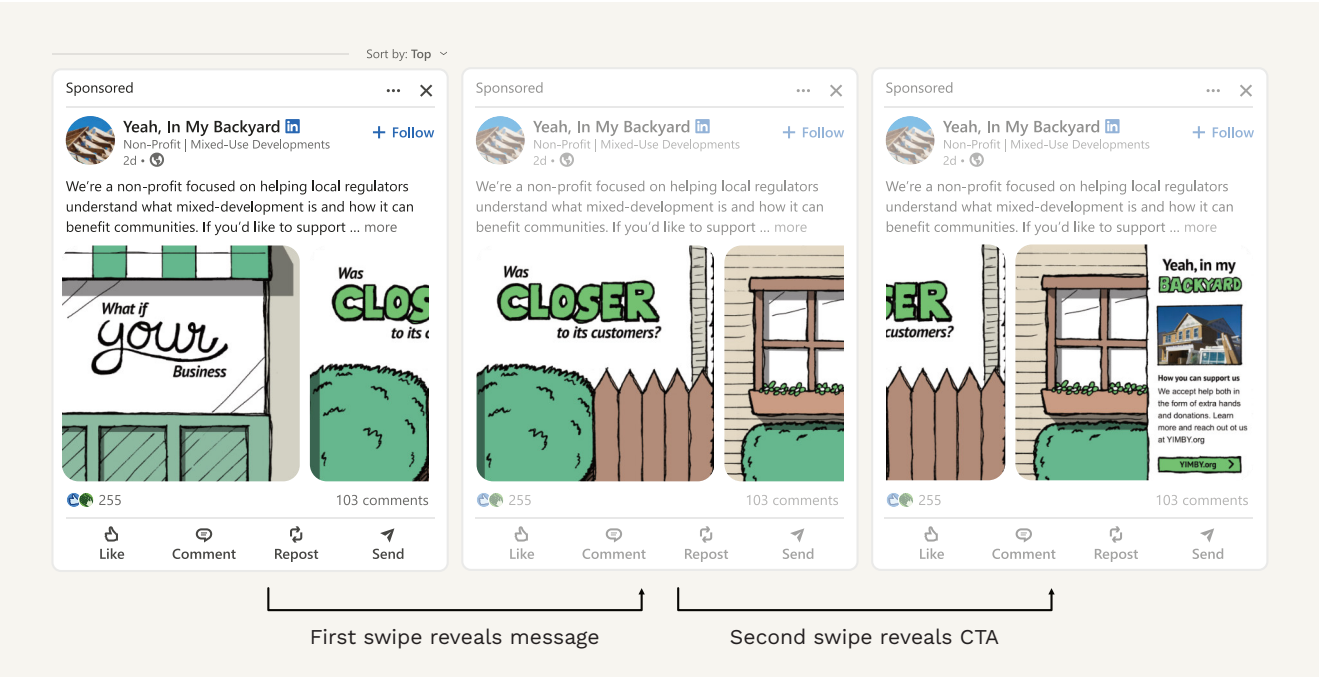

A Relaxed, Lighthearted, Community Focused Campaign

If cities approached neighbors with a friendly, conversation-driven information campaign, neighbors would understand what’s being built, how its going to happen, and how it benefits them and the community.

The styling, wording, and approach of “Yeah, in My Backyard” is meant to do exactly that.

LinkedIn Ad For Business Owners

Thank You Email for Donations

Photos taken by Vincent Yuan

Redesigning an Existing Brand

Dividing 3 New Brand Attributes

Honest & Warm Playful & Fun Bold & Brave

A Disconnect

When the now-current Colorado state logo was unveiled, citizens of Colorado were not happy. The previous logo wasn't well-loved either but this new, throw-back logo seemed to hit a nerve.

Behind the controversy of whether the logo looks "ugly" or "fine", there was broad agreement that the new logo didn't represent Colorado very well.

Pulling From The Current Logo

Overlapping Elements

Besides adding extra detail to the logo, having a secondary element behind the 'C' helps give the logo a very recognizable silhouette.

The 'O' Disguised as the Sun

Taken from the state's flag, the yellow sun also works as an 'O', a nod to the state's acronym 'CO'.

The Overall 'C' Shape

The 'C' itself being the logo instead of being inside the logo really helps the logo's recognizability and readability at small sizes like website icons.

Tram Mockup by Mr Mockup

ID Badge Mockup by Mockups-Design.com

Flag & Welcome Sign Mockups by Mr Mockup

